

6. He to whom thou givest a present that he may give¹ obtains abundance of wealth; we, desiring wealth, invoke with our praises Indra Satakratu, the lord of wealth,

7. If ever art thou heedless, thou guardest both races, (gods and men); 0 fourth Xditya,² to thee belongs the Indra-invocation, the ambrosia has risen to heaven.

8. (As thou hearest) the worshipper whom thou favourest, 0 Indra, Maghavan, liberal one, thou that lovest hymns, —so, gracious one, hear our hymns and our invocation of praise, like Kanwa's.

9. The old hymn has been sung, ye have uttered the prayer to Indra; they have shouted many brihatz-veraes of the rite, many hymns of the worshipper have they poured forth.

10. Indra has heaped together vast stores of wealth, the two worlds and the sun; the bright pure Soma-drink, mixed with milk, has exhilarated Indra.

Y.

To Indra; the rishi is Medhya.

1. We come to thee, 0 Maghavan Indra, the highest of Maghavans, the strongest of bulls, the mightiest breaker of forts, the provider of kine, the lord of wealth.

9. Thou who, waxing in might day by day, didst destroy Ayu, Eutsa, and Atithigva,— we invoke thee, Satakratu, with thy bay horses, rousing thee by our offerings.

10. Let the stones pour forth the honey-juice for us all,— the Soma-drops which have been pressed by men afar or near.

² f.<-. with Yaruna, Mitra, and Aryaman.
